Art Relieves Stress in Kids with Anxiety Disorders

Leyla Bayan, Arezou Eshaghabadi*

Shefa Neuroscience Research Center, Khatam Alanbia Hospital, Tehran, Iran

Published: 23-24 November, 2016

Abstract

Art is a way to provide distance from the intense affect associated with the disaster, and a way to work around and through the natural defenses that arise when trying to link affect with cognition. The ability to create art about the threatening thoughts and feelings channels the child’s energy into the art, or into a positive task, which then can be explored safely. If these thoughts can be examined, discussed, and made meaningful in a concrete fashion through the art, the continual cycle of disruptive thinking, acting out, or symptoms can be interrupted and perhaps relieved or reduced. Art therapy can provide an excellent outlet for children with anxiety disorders to express themselves. It has been shown to benefit kids with ADHD, autism, and anxiety related to family problems. The aim of art therapy is to facilitate positive change through engagement with the therapist and the art materials in a safe environment.

Keywords: Stress, Art, Anxiety

*Corresponding Author: Arezou Eshaghabadi

E-mail: a.eshaghabadi@gmail.com